OFFICIAL STATEMENT BY H.R.H. KING LEIF I

I find the following saddening in contemporary politics:

- Division among people and nations based on race, religion and gender. Another side of this coin is that you cannot love others before loving yourself. Division is not a sign of self-awareness, it is a sign of insecurity,
- Selfish gain before common good; this goes for most politicians today who so seldom have firm beliefs,
- Having the guts to stand up for who you are and what you believe in, and respecting others who do the same,
- Secularism and religious dogma in sheep's clothing; they're both the same, pretending to be something they're not,
- Lack of democratic conscience, i.e. having the character to respect your adversaries even though you don't agree,
- The total absence of a moral compass among macronational rulers and subjects. God is presumed dead, but what has filled His place?

- The notion that we are separated from nature, and thus do as we please, without considering the grave consequences of our actions,

- Globalism is not necessarily a thing people long for, it is a system created by commercial interests. Global decisions would be great for dealing with pressing issues like climate change and poverty, but we have seen very little action in those political areas. What are the cultural advantages of having the choice of eating a Big Mac and drink a Coke all over the world?
