

Important Information, Part 3 [15.7.2020]

A few weeks have passed since we began limiting our presence on social media. We have had time to work with our Website and our many subdomains, but we have also realized that the constant updates on different social media platforms are time-consuming. It only takes a few minutes to publish an update, but the thought process behind it is a strain on our daily schedule.

We are an ancient nation and want no part of the fast-paced circus of contemporary times. Accordingly, we have begun shifting focus from social media posts to longer articles on our Website. We have even started to diverge from purely digital content to analog; several books are in the pipeline, and more books will follow.

We are in full control of the whole process, and we choose when and what to write. If a piece takes a month or an hour to write is of no importance. What matters is doing what we love, and promoting and inspiring that passion for people who share our visions.

The bottom line is this: all of our social media accounts will be dormant, meaning they will be online but not updated at all from now on. We keep them online for a while only to be able to copy the content and publish it in print form.

Important Information, Part 2 [23.6.2020]

We've given this some serious thought and decided to limit our time on social media quite substantially. Starting from next week, this is our plan:

- We will maintain our micronational presence on Facebook but limit the content strictly to updates made on our Website. We will post updates on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays.
- Our Twitter account will solely consist of updates from The Unixplorian Times. We will post on Sundays.
- Our Instagram accounts (Unixploria, Collectioseum, and Biblioiseum) will be updated as follows:

Unixploria - Tuesdays and Thursdays
Collectioseum - Thursdays
Biblioiseum – Tuesdays
- Our Pinterest account will be dormant, meaning it will be online but not updated regularly. We've already taken the precaution of downloading the pictures. We've also printed all the images and made physical books of all the photos.

Our Website: <https://unixploria.net/>

Facebook (Unixploria): <https://www.facebook.com/unixploria/>

Instagram (Unixploria): <https://www.instagram.com/unixploria>

Instagram (Collectioseum): <https://www.instagram.com/collectioseum/>

Instagram (Biblioeseum): <https://www.instagram.com/Biblioeseum/>

Pinterest (Unixploria): <https://www.pinterest.com/Unixploria/>

Twitter (Unixploria): <https://twitter.com/Unixploria>

We believe that this is a necessary step for us to take, and it will hopefully lead to more time for our micronational endeavors. This has been a joint decision between the King, the royal family, and the cabinets of the Unixplorian government.

Thank you for your patience and support!

Important Information [20.6.2020]

A statement from our King concerning our recent post on purging our activity on social media. N. B. King Leif does most of the work in the online sphere, hence his thoughts concerning the matter at hand.

" It's a struggle for me to limit the time spent on social media. I've been off Facebook before, and it felt liberating. However, I've never deleted my account, not once since I created my account in 2006. I was a pioneer back then, set up my account a few weeks after FB was available to the public.

I will weigh the pros and cons very carefully before I do anything drastic. The bottom line is that I need to take control of my creative content, as well as time spent on platforms that don't offer me anything. I will continue to keep our Website, which is quite extensive in itself.

I love creating and sharing stuff there, but Facebook has become too intrusive for me. I do enjoy our discussions; I need to plan my time spent here better, including purging most content that doesn't relate to my micronational, intellectual, or creative endeavors.

My dear wife, Queen Åsa, told me to take a few weeks to think this through, and she's right, of course. I admin several groups with thousands of members, and I'd hate to see them take a dark path in my absence.

I will structure my thoughts and find ways to achieve my goals without losing people and content I care deeply for. I will make my actions clear to all before I do anything.

Most important of all: The citizens of Unixploria also have to have their say in all this. My presence here is mainly a result of my love for the micronational movement. I'd hate to lose that community of brethren."